Dehumanize disabled people!
Good people do it!
So, yeah, fashists dehumanize disabled people and it's bad!
It sure is horrible!
Like, it's so evil and cruel and bad. No good person does it.

[ID: An MS Paint meme showing three stick figures. Two are standing further away from the camera behind a large wall, having a conversation while looking sad. A third stands on the other side of the wall, eavesdropping by pressing their ear to a cup against the wall, failing to understand what they’re hearing.

The original conversation has the first stick figure say with a frown, “So, yeah, fashists dehumanize disabled people and it’s bad!”

The second figure replies, also with a sad frown, “It sure is horrible! Like, it’s so evil and cruel and bad. No good person does it.”

On the other side of the wall and closer to the camera, the eavesdropper grins widely, thinking, “Dehumanize disabled people! Good people do it!”.

The bottom of the image is captioned with, “Martha Wells reading and absolutely failing to understand The Imperial Radch series before she was inspired by it to write The Murderbot Diaries anyways”, with the date listed as March 22nd 2024.

So in the next few years you can all look forward to seeing even more bigoted stories that were inspired by The Murderbot Diaries that continue the trend of failing to understand the morals of the original story.

This is just a continuation of Martha Wells' history of ableism in her writing. And there's a lot of it. Including having a character who's loved and considered wise cheerfully advocating for eugenics and we're all supposed to clap and cheer instead of be horrified.
